MSOE Todd Wehr Auditorium

Program Details:

"The Flexibility of a Civil Engineering Education"

Dr. Randy Rapp presents an interesting look at the utility of a civil engineering education. The presentation will provide insight into his experiences dealing with reconstruction efforts from the aftermath of hurricanes Katrina and Wilma. He will also discuss his time spent in the middle east while participating in oil infrastructure recovery construction. Until late May, Dr. Rapp was employed by Kellogg, Brown, and Root, formerly a division of Halliburton. He held various positions with the company providing assistance for hurricanes Katrina and Wilma. He also served as Deputy Program General Manager in KBR's Gulf Region Division Oil Program, in which he demobilized KBR's oil effort in Basra, Iraq. He earlier served as the Director of Construction Management Program at the Milwaukee School of Engineering. Dr. Rapp's career also includes years of service with the Army Corps of Engineers, including a post as Deputy District Engineer. He also served eight years with engineer troop units, all of which had construction duties, plus faculty time at the Army Engineer School, force development in the Pentagon, and military infrastructure program management with NATO.
